On Jan. 27, we posted the following status update on our Facebook page: “The blizzard of 1978 was 35 years ago today. Who remembers that?” Now, a week later, that one post has since received 1,140 likes, 262 comments and 52 shares. It’s clear that many of our readers did, in fact, recall the once-in-a-generation weather event quite well.

When Pulitzer Prize-winning Chicago Sun-Times film critic Roger Ebert died April 4, 2013 at age 70 after a years-long battle with cancer, he left behind a vibrant legacy. The Urbana, Ill. native inspired countless other critics and boasted a fan base of millions of fellow movie lovers around the world. Now, a year after his passing, a vital strand of that heritage, Ebertfest: Roger Ebert's Film Festival, kicks off its 16th year tonight at the historic, 1,500-seat Virginia Theatre in Champaign, Ill.

Critic year-end lists can be a bit cumbersome, filled with artists you've never heard of and albums you've never listened to. In an effort to expedite that process and provide something useful as we close out 2014, I've selected five albums I'm sure will provide at least something you, the readers might be interested in. Then again, you might not. These five albums, however, at least deserve a shot, and made the past year sound so much better.

On Thursday, Michigan Gov. Rick Snyder signed a controversial piece of legislation which will have major implications for those wishing to adopt in that state. "The ACLU is already looking at options to challenge laws, signed Gov. Snyder Thursday, that will allow faith-based adoption agencies in Michigan to refuse to serve prospective parents, like same-sex or unmarried couples, if doing so would violate the agencies' religious beliefs," reported Kathleen Gray of the Detroit Free Press on Thursday. "The decision came after the bill was placed on the Senate's agenda at the last minute — and with no notice Wednesday — passed and quickly concurred in by the House of Representatives." So, we wanted to know: "What do you think of this legislation? Why?"

Jamie Kuntz, 18, freshman linebacker at the North Dakota State College of Sciences, was dismissed from his team earlier this month after stealing a kiss on the sidelines from his 65-year-old boyfriend. Coach Chuck Parsons said the fact that Kuntz lied about the embrace, initially saying it was his grandfather, was the cause for the termination.

Cecilia Giménez has had quite a year. The 81-year-old is an amateur painter and resident of Borja, a town in the province of Zaragoza, community of Aragon, north-eastern Spain. According to Giménez, she approached the priest at the town's Sanctuary of Mercy church with a request. One of the church's frescos, a 19th century mural called "Ecce Homo" ("Behold the Man") by Elías García Martínez, had fallen into disrepair due to moisture damage. The octogenarian said she asked for and received permission to restore the painting, which depicted Jesus adorned with a crown of thorns.

Tonight, virtually the only substantive portion of our never-ending presidential election cycle kicks off at Magness Arena at the University of Denver in Colorado. The event, hosted by the Commission on Presidential Debates, will be the first of three televised match-ups between Democrat Barack Obama and Republican Mitt Romney. What won't be featured are the candidates of any other party.

In the days and weeks after the Dec. 14 tragedy in Newtown, Conn., where 28 human beings were slaughtered by firearms, we as a nation held a serious, adult debate about the future of guns in America. Of course, I'm kidding. Actually, the country lost its collective mind.

Last August, I wrote a column called “Journalism’s new crime lab” in which I outlined the misdeeds of several less-than-truthful writers including Mike Daisey and Jonah Lehrer. In that piece I wondered why modern journalists would risk plagiarizing when things like Google exist. For Daisey and Lehrer, the answer seems to be: Because even when caught red-handed, the embarrassment itself can become fodder for future projects.

In February, I read a short news story that barely caught my attention. A relatively minor figure in the history of East Coast rap, Timothy “Tim Dog” Blair, had reportedly died at the age of 46 of a seizure connected to his diabetes.

When we eschew our own values in pursuit of scoundrels, we degrade ourselves. This fact was brought into stunning relief due to the response to a developing scandal in Canada's largest city. It all began last month when a report was released regarding the head of Toronto's government.

BLOOMINGTON — As I sat in the Buskirk-Chumley Theater on Thursday waiting for the opening show of the inaugural Limestone Comedy Festival, I reflected on my various connections to Bloomington. I was born less than a mile away in Bloomington Hospital. A few blocks in the opposite direction was the site of my higher education, Indiana University. And the last time I was in that particular building, my wife, Ash, and I were married on that very stage. I feel a certain ownership of this place. I sensed that same sort of possession in many of the audience members and 40-plus performers who took part in Indiana's first and only comedy festival.

In the ever-darkening days at the end of each year — when Christmas songs begin to fill the air — a simple thought never fails to amuse me. It's the idea of the musicians behind those noises, and the conditions under which the songs were produced. Christmas music isn't generally recorded at Christmas. It just can't be. It wouldn't work. It has to be ready ahead of time. That has to mean while the band or artist in question is plugging away at, say, "Jingle Bell Rock" inside the recording studio, just outside their front door temperatures could easily be reaching triple digits. I was reminded of this personal joke a few days ago when I read about Texas Gov. Rick Perry's signing of the so-called "Merry Christmas" bill into law.

On July 8, anti-death penalty nonprofit group Reprieve released a shocking video on The Guardian's website. At the start of the clip, a warning explains "some viewers may find these images distressing." The title card fades as a new one appears. "There are currently 120 detainees on hunger strike in Guantanamo Bay," it reads. "Forty-four of them are being force-fed against their will. Yasiin Bey, better known as Mos Def, volunteered to undergo the procedure used on the detainees. This is what happened."

Last year, the National Low Income Housing Association produced a fascinating and disturbing map. Perhaps you've seen it. The representation showed the number of hours per week it would take a minimum-wage worker to afford a two-bedroom apartment in each state.

At 5 a.m. Alaska Daylight Time Friday, the National Weather Service in Alaska released a forecast with a hidden message. On the surface it appeared to be your standard, technical weather chatter. But, if readers followed the first letter of each line of text down the left-hand side, they would discover hidden in mundane meteorological talk a cryptic plea: "P_L_E_A_S_E_P_A_Y_U_S".

With the Big Day only a week away and this coming Saturday the first day of winter, the time felt right for a follow-up to my June 19 column, "War on Christmas ... summer edition." The original piece was a response to Texas Gov. Rick Perry's June 13 signing of House Bill 308, the so-called "Merry Christmas" bill. "[The law protects] Christmas and other holiday celebrations in Texas public schools from legal challenges," according to The Associated Press. (If you don't see why this is problematic, see the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment.) So, what exactly has changed in the last six months? A lot, as it turns out. For starters, it's being enforced just as I feared it would be. The bill's co-author, state Rep. Pat Fallo, R-Frisco, earlier this month charged the Gene and Ruby Nichols Elementary School in his hometown with violating the law.

When I write my columns, I try my best to be as timely as possible. This is the first opportunity I've had to write about the recent "Duck Dynasty" controversy, and the whole thing is already over. The kerfuffle began Dec. 18 when A&E announced patriarch Phil Robertson's suspension in response to an upcoming article in the January issue of GQ by Drew Magary. "Start with homosexual behavior and just morph out from there: Bestiality, sleeping around with this woman and that woman and that woman and those men," read one choice Robertson quote.

You couldn't pay me enough to be a LGBT person in Russia right now. Things weren't great before, but they got a whole lot worse when a series of anti-gay laws passed last year.

I struggle with this every time I hear about a new project Woody Allen or Roman Polanski have released. I am filled with mixed emotions.

And then, there's the question of the price of the ticket in some small way funding the person who created it.

In my career as a journalist I have served my time reporting on city council, county supervisor and state regulatory meetings, to name just a few. Whatever else they might have been, they weren't holy places.

In the many, many hours I spent there I never felt the presence of anything that might be described as transcendent or spiritual.

Perhaps this is part of why I have so much trouble understanding those who seek desperately to assign governmental powers to their religious beliefs. Why do they keep trying it?

These two stories aren’t examples of apostates to the cause in the slightest. I would classify them as True Believers, with impressive resumes to back them up. No, scarily enough, these are what pass for heretics in today’s gun world. That is, at least, according to the ones who actually call the tune: gun makers and those who feel their Chipotle Burrito Bowl just doesn't taste the same without an AK-47 by their side.

Monday "The Case Against 8," a documentary co-directed by Kokomo native Ben Cotner, premiered on HBO. Two days prior, I was lucky enough to be invited by Sarah Cotner, Ben's sister, to attend a special screening of the film at Indiana University Kokomo's Kresge Auditorium.

While the justices weighed their options inside the Supreme Court Building earlier this year, they enjoyed their own buffer zone. Their self-styled "bubble" extends 252 feet, all the way across the oval plaza across from the entrance. Thus, the justices have set two different standards: one for themselves and one for everyone else.

Imagine you've just been arrested, and you have your smartphone with you. Think about all the personal information contained on that device. Now, are you comfortable with the arresting officer poking around your cellphone without just cause while you remain handcuffed? I wouldn't be, and, thankfully, neither would any of the sitting justices of the U.S. Supreme Court. On June 25, the high court voted 9-0 in favor of personal privacy in the case of Riley v. California.

Whilst hacking through the dense underbrush of emotional court battles, it's easy to miss the forest for the trees. This has proven especially true in the wake of the June 30 Supreme Court decision in the case of Burwell v. Hobby Lobby. At issue were the religious objections of the Oklahoma City-based craft store chain's founder David Green and his family to Affordable Care Act-mandated employee coverage of emergency contraception (including Plan B and ella) and intrauterine devices (including ParaGard, Mirena and Skyla.) They believe them to be tantamount to abortion.

I am 31 years old. For 20 of those years — nearly two-thirds — the surname of the head of state has been either Bush or Clinton. During those remaining 11 years, five of those included H.W. Bush as vice president to President Ronald Reagan, and another four saw Hillary as secretary of state. In fact, only the 537 days in which John Kerry succeeded Clinton at the state department have featured an executive branch bereft of a Bush or Clinton in my lifetime.

On July 22, the Supreme Court gave the go-ahead for the killing of Arizona death row inmate James R. Wood III, who had filed suit requesting a delay until the state revealed the details of the drugs that would be used to end his life. "The officials said they meant to use two chemicals, midazolam and hydromorphone, but they refused to identify the manufacturers or suppliers of the chemicals or to describe the qualifications of the personnel who were to administer them," reported Adam Liptak of The New York Times on July 22. The following day, Wood's worst fears of cruel and unusual execution were realized.

It was a news alert that Robin Williams had died that morning at the age of 63 of an apparent suicide. (Creepily, I found out later the movie’s suicidal character, Frank, played by Steve Carell, was nearly played by Williams.)

During Spring Break 2012, he and his compatriots crossed two state lines to distribute $20,000 worth of contraband to the youth of Texas, New Mexico and Arizona. But what they transported wasn't drugs. (Although, you'd never know it from the way local officials there treated it.) Rather, Diaz became a self-described el librotraficante. When public figures such as Reid and organizations like the Census Bureau and the Army step up and make amends, they are at least admitting their descriptive words have power. While people can call themselves whatever they want, we should address others however they feel most comfortable at the time. Intent and context count for a lot. Just watch it.

As I write these words, it is 9:26 a.m. Tuesday. I am finishing this column now for publication in Wednesday morning's paper. The grand jury empaneled Aug. 20 to decide whether to charge Ferguson, Missouri, police officer Darren Wilson in the Aug. 9 shooting of unarmed African American teenager Michael Brown is concluding its supposedly secret deliberations now. (Or else, it's already done. Who knows?)

On Dec. 17, when Sony Pictures Entertainment canceled the Christmas release of the Seth Rogen/James Franco comedy "The Interview," which centered around the assassination of North Korea's Kim Jong-un, I was appalled. At least Sony had actually been hacked Nov. 24 by the "Guardians of Peace" and later threatened if it opened the movie. What was really stupefying was watching other, unrelated studios give in before anyone even threatened them. The same day, New Regency Productions scrapped the upcoming "Pyongyang," a graphic novel adaptation starring Steve Carell.

Anyone who puts their work out into the world faces criticism. It's expected. It's part of the job. It's not something that can be totally escaped, nor should it be. Developing some methods of coping with both positive and negative responses to your hard work is essential. But what The Guardian columnist and GQ magazine writer Lindy West faced, no one should be asked to endure.

There is an astounding footnote tucked on page 13 of the Oct. 16, 2012 decision in the case of Ames v. Nationwide Mutual Insurance, et al. It was issued by the District Court for the Southern District of Iowa Central Division. "Ames has not presented sufficient evidence that lactation is a medical condition related to pregnancy," it reads.

"Indeed, as the Nationwide defendants point out, 'lactation can be induced by stimulating the body to produce milk even though the person has not experienced a recent birth or pregnancy.' ...

Furthermore, it is a scientific fact that even men have milk ducts and the hormones responsible for milk production. ... Accordingly, lactation is not a physiological condition experienced exclusively by women who have recently given birth."

March 7, 1965, 25-year-old Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee chairman John Lewis helped guide hundreds of marchers out of Selma, Alabama, in the direction of Montgomery. The civil rights activists were mobilized in support of the Martin Luther King Jr.-led Selma Voting Rights Campaign. They were quickly met by a line of Alabama State Troopers at the behest of Democratic Gov. George Wallace and Dallas County Sheriff Jim Clark.

The '90s was the best decade that's happened during my lifetime. The Cold War was over. The economy thrived. Our military was mostly idle. As a barometer of the actual, relatively minor amount of threat we were under, I always cite our national obsession with tawdry news stories like the Monica Lewinsky affair. But it's easy to forget, there are human beings in those circuses.

I totally understand the anger directed toward my home state by the rest of the country. The only thing these people respect will be a swift kick to the pocketbooks. I get it. But, if you do decide to spend money with Hoosier businesses, think about doing it loudly with companies who have declared their willingness to serve all customers. And, RFRA-supporting business owners, the onus is on you. Declare yourself. Your silence is deafening right now.

What worries me most about this is not that officers don't know the law, but they now have no incentive to do so. If you're an officer, saying you didn't know the law will get you out of more scrapes than learning it.

I arrived Friday at the 17th annual Ebertfest during the closing moments of the first panel discussion of the day, "Filmmaking in the Digital Age." The session was being held in the Pine Lounge of the Illini Union on the campus of the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. This was the third day of the week-long celebration started by late Chicago Sun-Times film critic Roger Ebert, who died at age 70 in 2013.

Both then and now Baltimore burned because leaders refused to follow the example set by Kennedy and Brown. When you talk at people instead of to them, you make it clear you're not interested in listening to them. A month before his death, King delivered a speech March 14, 1968, at Grosse Pointe High School in Grosse Pointe, Michigan, which perfectly described this dichotomy. "A riot is the language of the unheard," he said. America, are you listening, or are you just talking?

Time is running out for Obama to make good on this promise. This is about much more than resolving campaign hypocrisy with governing realities. Calling genocide by its right name is imperative. Like Hitler in 1939, the next tyrant looking to throw their very own holocaust will note well how we speak of those which have come before it.

Princesses don't get to exist in a vacuum. The title is but a cog in an antiquated monarchical political system. This hereditary form of government in most modern usages carries with it an air of quaint romanticism, its charms being the sole reason for its otherwise inexplicable continued existence. So far, no other countries have recognized Heaton's claims. If he had planted his flag even 200 years ago, he would have fit right in there. New monarchies claiming ownership over a desolate land through flag planting would not have only been tolerated, but commonplace. Now, not so much.

I’m glad the court decided the way it did, but I would have appreciated a broader ruling that addressed the First Amendment issues. Unlike musicians who sing every other genre of music, the long list of rappers I could name who have their lyrics used by prosecutors for convictions and in extended, enhanced sentencing are too numerous to name.

Roberts, Scalia, Thomas and Alito are flailing. Court demographics, procedure, hippies, the dignity of slaves — I just couldn’t guess what they’d throw against the wall next. By contrast, Kennedy just guaranteed his legacy with his moving prose.

Fox had changed the admittance rules just days before. The 9 p.m. main event still featured the top 10 as determined by an average of five national polls two days prior. The 5 p.m. debate scrapped the requirement for at least 1 percent support.

I read this book in high school and I wanted to revisit it one last time before I set about tackling Lee's newest work. From what I've heard, some very troubling details have surfaced regarding both the fictional characters and real-life players in this story and I wanted one last look before my view of this modern classic was changed forever. More on that next week.

Over and over in the years leading up to Obergefell, I kept hearing the argument that same-sex marriage would threaten the institution of marriage. This line always baffled me, as I saw no effect on my — or any other straight couple's — marriage based on the legality or illegality of same-sex marriage. Apparently, Davis, Gipson, Jensen and their ilk are willing to blow up the very idea of legal marriage if they can't have their way. I never saw this one coming. But, what can I say? I love a twist ending!

As of this writing, the GOP is slated for a total of no less than 11 debates before the primary season has concluded. And the Democrats? Just six. Not only that, but the DNC has promised to ban any candidate from its official stages who dares participate in any non-sanctioned debate. To push back against these restrictive measures, O'Malley's campaign has undertaken the aggressive tactic of supporting protests at the DNC's Washington, D.C., headquarters, set to coincide with Wednesday's Republican debate.

After squeezing 17 candidates into two debates Aug. 6, the Republican presidential field shrunk by one Sept. 11. Former Texas Gov. Rick Perry announced at the Eagle Forum in St. Louis he would no longer be eyeing the White House in 2016 through his new glasses. And while the rules of the first debate allowed all announced GOP candidates a platform, CNN and Salem Media Group decided their Sept. 16 debate in the Air Force One Pavilion at the Ronald Reagan Presidential Library in Simi Valley, California, would require at least a 1 percent poll showing, leaving out former Virginia Gov. Jim Gilmore.

Sponsored by Fox Business News and The Wall Street Journal, the fourth set of Republican presidential debates took place Nov. 10 at the Milwaukee Theater in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. On Nov. 13, 130 were killed and hundreds were injured in a series of attacks on Paris. On Nov. 14, the Democratic candidates met for the second debate, this time at Drake University in Des Moines, Iowa, which was sponsored by CBS News, KCCI and The Des Moines Register. The difference between the questions featured in each debate was stark as most of the candidates didn't get a chance to weigh in on the crisis on the debate stage due to the timing of the attacks. This was just as well. At no point during the day on Nov. 13 did I think to myself, "I wonder what the presidential candidates think about all this?"

I have decided there is a way I will forgive whataboutists: If they are willing to fully commit to their arguments, I'll let it slide. Let's see them advocate for a social safety net for homeless veterans when it's not just convenient to the point they are attempting to make.

Republicans can't afford to embrace a losing strategy. But, if the most popular outsider candidates are purged, they can very well run as a third-party, siphoning off votes. It's a pickle the GOP put themselves in, and it's one only they can get themselves out of.

Giving UK voters another whack at this one could be the smartest course of action, as their Google searches from the day after showed some, shall we say, knowledge gaps. "If you judge a country's interests only by prevalent Google searches, it was after the polls closed when British voters started to think seriously about the implications of their choice," reported NPR's Alina Selyukh on Friday. "According to data from Google Trends, the searches for 'what is the eu' and 'what is brexit' started climbing across Britain late into the night." If there is a next time, Brits: Google first, vote later.

For nearly a century, a legal precept known as "fruit of a poisonous tree" has been established by the Supreme Court. This legal metaphor states that if evidence against a suspect is obtained illegally, then anything found is inadmissible in court. This philosophy represents the so-called "exclusionary rule" of the Fourth Amendment that bars

"against unreasonable searches and seizures." You can forget all that now, I guess.

Saturday marked the 51st anniversary of one of the most important pieces of legislation ever signed in this country: the Voting Rights Act of 1965. Sadly, as I wrote in my July 3, 2013 column, "SCOTUS giveth, then it taketh", the Supreme Court's decision in the case of Shelby County v. Holder effectively ripped the vital organs out of the VRA.

Ever since I was hired for my first full-time job as a journalist at the Reporter-Times in Martinsville 10 years ago, editing the obituaries has been a constant feature of every newsroom job since. Five days a week for years, I have had thousands of opportunities to contemplate the stories of complete strangers. You could say it has made me think about death more than the average person probably does, but I would argue it has made me think more about life.

If you are, were and always will be against the passive resistance of Smith, Carlos, Ali and Kaepernick on grounds of disrespect towards the flag and the military men and women who died under it, I'll give you points for consistency. (Though, I would point out one of the rights veterans fought for was the First Amendment, which protects even deeply unpopular speech.) But if you salute these historical figures, but not Kaepernick, I would just ask: Is it really that these are such different cases? Or is it just that the first two happened a long time ago and you're just experiencing this one in real time?

We, as a country, should operate as if the president could die at any moment. It's why the Secret Service protects the candidates and the president. It's why a designated survivor from the president's Cabinet is chosen to be sequestered at a secret location during the State of the Union address. Because of that same order of succession, it's why we care so much who the vice president is. Since the ratification of the 25th Amendment in 1967, Reagan (once) and George W. Bush (twice) temporarily named vice presidents George H.W. Bush and Dick Cheney, respectively, as acting president while undergoing colon procedures.

Trump offered no evidence to back up his claim of election fraud, but if he truly thinks millions of votes were illegitimate he should welcome a complete audit of the entire country. Maybe this Stein fundraiser is a scam, but so what? Knock yourself out. If Trump is right he has nothing to worry about. In fact, he has a duty to do a recount if he wants to preserve the integrity of the very concept of elections in this country.

Before Friday's inauguration of President Donald Trump, it didn't matter to me one bit how many or how few people showed up in Washington, D.C. It could have happened at night, alone, in the middle of the woods, or everyone in the world could have been forced to view it. My mind was far too consumed with grasping the reality this was actually happening to consider spending two seconds worrying about statistics. Bleachers along the parade route sat empty and the National Mall crowd seemed sparse, but I shrugged my shoulders and attempted to go about my day.

At its height in the years right before World War II, the British crown claimed dominion over nearly a half-billion subjects — one-fifth of the world's population at the time, the most in history. Between 1946, when Jordan gained independence, and 1986, when Australia and New Zealand went their own ways, 56 countries have declared their autonomy from the UK. Of late, nationalistic movements across the globe like Brexit have promised a return to former glory. In fact, it may be Brexit itself that finally causes England to finally go it alone at the bottom of Great Britain.

Even if you disagree with me on the death penalty itself, nothing about our imperfect system run by fallible humans suggests we should speed up the process by unreliable means.

Nov. 13, 2016, the first Sunday after the election of President Trump, parishioners of St. David's Episcopal Church in Bean Blossom saw three large swaths of graffiti on the outer blue walls: a swastika, "HEIL TRUMP" and a gay slur. Organist George Nathaniel Stang, 26, Bloomington, was the first to arrive before 9:30 a.m. services. As it turned out, Stang himself was responsible. The night before, he used black spray paint purchased with cash at Bloomington Hardware.

The minute you lose your head and spew vitriol in response to these provocations, you've already given these famous trolls what they want. Though, they shouldn't be surprised if the Secret Service has some questions. (One of my favorite stories from the satirical newspaper, The Onion, is: "Marilyn Manson Now Going Door-To-Door Trying To Shock People.") These incidents seems to be the domain of the celebrity on the other side of their peak. If you'd rather enjoy the whooshing sound as they speed ever more rapidly down the road to irrelevancy, just ignore them. The situation we're about to discuss is about far more than state money being used to fund a specific playground on church land. It's about the very foundation of what makes America, well, America. The case of Trinity Lutheran Church of Columbia, Inc. v. Comer was argued before the full Supreme Court April 19, and was decided June 26. It's so far unclear how the NFL will ultimately rule on the larger question. His collusion charge has plenty of circumstantial evidence on its side, but it won't be until the discovery phase that we will know how provable such a case would be. If the league did conspire to make an example of him, they failed miserably. Whatever the outcome, it's pointless to continue this apparent blackballing. Movements are larger than one man.

that took part in National Night Out.

The images this week of Ferguson, Missouri in the wake of the civil unrest caused by the death of unarmed African-American teenager Michael Brown have been shocking to say the least. Were the dateline removed from the pictures, one could easily imagine them emanating from some far-away war zone, and not a suburb of St. Louis.

We've all seen them on the streets, and their popularity is only growing. Mopeds have coasted in a legal grey area for years in Indiana. A lack of registration, testing and licensure allowed those without other means of transport to join other vehicles on the road without many prerequisites, often making for dangerous driving for all involved.

It is to Goodell's and the NFL's eternal shame these incidents were so tremendously mishandled. Goodell is now in damage-control mode, announcing a review and overhaul of the league's domestic violence policy. Clearly, something is amiss in the Peru Police Department. What is staggering to us is how little has been done to correct what is clearly a systemic problem. In Walker's Sept. 16 statement to the press announcing Kennedy's departure, he called the campaign against Kennedy "mean spirited," but said no officers would face disciplinary action.

Before the Indianapolis Colts take to Heinz Field to square off against the Pittsburgh Steelers Oct. 26, a clash far more controversial than anything during the game is scheduled to take place. Nancy Brinker, Susan G. Komen Foundation founder, is set to accept a $100,000 check from Martin Craighead, chairman of oil and fracking company Baker Hughes Inc. Both entities have faced sharp criticism this month after the partnership — now in its second year — was announced; and rightly so. The irony of Baker Hughes producing 1,000 pink fracking drill bits in celebration was nearly too outrageous to believe.

As we reported in our front page story Wednesday, three Indiana University campuses — IU Kokomo, IU South Bend and IU Northwest — are sharing a three-year, $450,000 grant to provide academic support and financial incentives for Ivy Tech students to transfer to IU to complete a four-year degree. Major kudos should be awarded to the Kresge Foundation — a $3 billion private, national foundation — which made the program possible through its generous donation.

This outrage must result in action. Most police officers are decent, working class people just trying to get home to their families like everyone else. The result of the Garner case and those like it sullies the uniform and breeds justifiable distrust in the communities they are sworn to serve. Now, if state superintendent was a position appointed by the governor instead of a separately elected position, would it not place the blame or credit for education policy in the state squarely on the governor's shoulders? Some say it would increase accountability in the state's chief executive and reduce education-policy gridlock, while others say it would turn the office into a rubber stamp. So, here's our solution:

Let the voters decide. This issue should be decided by referendum. It's an idea at least worth considering.

If it does turn out to be the North Koreans behind this attack, it will only prove totalitarianism has no sense of humor. This isn't surprising as it has always been that way. What is shocking is the cowardice shown in the face of this threat. How shameful of Sony to buckle to the pressure of the cyberterrorists. Freedom of speech and freedom from censorship are two bedrock American principles. What precedent does this set for the future? This may have started with a comedy, but this response isn't amusing in the slightest.

No matter what you think of gun rights in this country, one thing should be clear: It only takes one moment of inattention, one pull of the trigger to bring someone's life to an abrupt conclusion. Some training and respect for firearms really isn't not much to ask of those who wish to wield such power in public. We recognize the need when it comes to automobiles, why not here? The Obama administration currently is working with the United Kingdom, Russia, China, France and Germany on a sensitive nuclear deal with Iran. The deadline for such a compact is March 31. Time is of the essence, and the stakes couldn't be higher. So, when Tom Cotton, Arkansas' junior senator, used his 65th day in office to issue a direct letter to Iranian leaders March 9, his breach of the Constitution and general protocol made waves throughout the world.

Adopted June 7, 2014, the Indiana Republican Party could have begun the platform with any topic. It chose the heading: "Jobs and Economic Growth." "We are committed to creating an environment where jobs and our economy can grow," it read. "The proper role of government in this equation is to get out of the way .... The Pence Administration's overarching goal is more jobs in Indiana than ever before." After what happened in secret Thursday, the state's GOP should renounce this platform as a matter of consistency. Republican Gov. Mike Pence convened a private ceremony wherein he signed Senate Bill 101, the state's "Religious Freedom Restoration Act." No one in his circle should be shocked by the backlash. It's not as if they weren't warned.

This is frustrating beyond words. Perhaps if we had needle exchanges in the state to begin with, an emergency measure wouldn't need to be passed. And while we applaud the governor for finally allowing some exchanges, he apparently doesn't understand the magnitude of the crisis and still opposes them statewide.

This isn't about recreational marijuana, or even medical marijuana. Those terms would only serve to confuse the debate here. You can't get high on hemp no matter how hard you try. What we're talking about here is sick kids and their parents. Why must Indiana continue to be stuck in this backward mode when it comes to something this innocuous, especially when we've come so far?

We hope the fact this is a municipal election year isn't inhibiting the mayor and city council from doing what is right. Leaders in Martinsville and other municipalities have spoken with a clear voice. Your move, Kokomo.

If we want any semblance of democracy to make a return, we have to figure out a way to significantly reduce the amount of money being injected into our political races. This is the game politicians believe they must play in order to remain competitive. Our current state of affairs, both locally and nationally, means years of continued, endless fundraising as elections grow ever costlier. Ideas should rule, not checkbooks.

On Friday, Republican South Carolina state Rep. Norman “Doug” Brannon, told MSNBC’s Chris Hayes he would be introducing legislation in December to remove this symbol from the Statehouse. “I had a friend die Wednesday night for no reason other than he was a black man,” Brannon told Hayes in a phone interview. “Sen. Pinckney was an incredible human being. ... I’m gonna introduce the bill for that reason.” We applaud Rep. Brannon for his courage on this issue. For how can we truly say we mourn the victims of this racist terrorist attack if we still fly this outdated flag of oppression over government offices?

With the 50th anniversary of this historic federal law being celebrated this month, we must push our legislators on this issue. Anything less is an insult to those fought for that most fundamental of American freedoms: the right to vote.

These are but a few of the ways we could improve matters.

Fingers being pointed help no one. There is an amicable way to resolve this. It doesn't have to be political just because we're in a campaign season. For everyone's safety, please, work together and fix this.

Let us pause here and recognize the brave efforts of Parker, Ward and the entire WDBJ-TV news team. Even in his last moments, Ward's camera managed to capture a parting image of his murderer. This screen grab was crucial to law enforcement, which used it to identify Flanagan. In the following hours, the WDBJ journalists who kept reporting through their tears and grief earned our respect. That's how you honor these journalists, by doing your job the way it's meant to be done. Even under the worst circumstances.

Our community must maintain its commitment to recycling. We cannot allow our waste to be disposed of in the manner in which we've become accustomed. Any of us of who have children have more than enough motivation to push for this. The continued wanton use of our finite resources will lead to our ultimate ruin without drastic change in our lifetimes. We can't keep living in a disposable, one-time-use world if we have any chance of handing the next generation a shot at a bright future.

We commend Pence for realizing the seriousness of this issue. However, we hold our applause until we find out what answers this commission comes back with. If it's nothing more than the same punitive, get-tough nonsense we've been seeing for the last half a century, then it should be back to the drawing board. We will expect nothing less than a radical course change. Otherwise, 45 years from now we'll be right back in the same position — if not worse.

Unlike more establishment Republicans like Powell and McCain, these outsiders with no government experience aren't eschewing fact-free bigotry. Quite to the contrary: they are downright courting it. The sad truth is that re-banning the AR-15 and the like won't even begin to address the most prevalent weapon used in mass shootings: legally obtained handguns. That's a much thornier issue. But, if we can't even call the AR-15-style rifle a step too far, how do we imagine we'll ever be able to address the larger gun problem in this country?

Cold, hard facts should always be welcome in a debate as serious as this one. No one is saying either side can't have their intractable positions. What we are saying is that without the needed data in hand, we can't have an intelligent discussion on this issue. The CDC is uniquely qualified to do this research, yet it isn't allowed to do so for purely political reasons.

Today marks the start of Sunshine Week 2017. This highlighting of open government was established in 2005 by the American Society of News Editors. This year, ASNE, The Associated Press and the Associated Press Media Editors, a group representing AP-affiliated news organizations, are teaming up to mark the importance of press freedoms for Sunshine Week and beyond.

Facing what has happened in the past is an important part of navigating the future. Simply forgetting it because it doesn't fit into a neatly-packaged narrative does no one any good. There will be other messy historical incidents that will need to be remembered as time progresses. May they be treated with the same respect as this episode.

Mandatory minimums unfairly punish nonviolent offenders with unnecessarily harsh sentences. These policies hurt more than just the convicts themselves, but also the families, friends and communities they leave behind while incarcerated. The longer they are away the harder it is to reintegrate into society when they do return. We know these draconian approaches don’t work because we’ve already tried them.

For whatever reason, committee member State Sen. Brandt Hershman, R-Buck Creek, hasn't seen this problem as a problem at all. Both Democrats and Republicans have benefited from gerrymandering in the past. This time, the state GOP is set to reap the rewards again in four years if nothing is done. We hope Bosma, Long and Torr make good on their promise of pushing the bipartisan independent commission idea forward before then. Short term gains for one party or another shouldn't come before voters' rights to be represented equitably.

It will be essential to tackling the work we expect our legislators to do when we send them to Washington, D.C.

It's heartening to see our representatives come together to work toward a common goal which reinforces our shared national sovereignty. There are other issues looming just over the horizon such as the debt ceiling, tax reform and, yes, stabilizing the Affordable Care Act's insurance markets. We hope these lawmakers are able to find common ground again and again. That's what politics at its best look like.

For now, no changes have been implemented. Tuesday, Coast Guard Commandant Adm. Paul Zukunft told the Center for Strategic and International Studies he will "not break faith" with transgender service members. We hope this is as far as Trump's ill-conceived plan goes, but if it continues, it would be nice if more than 140 characters of thought were put into it before it was unleashed.

We here in Howard County have recognized that the opioid issue is not an entirely law enforcement program. Social help is needed. Mental health help is needed. Addiction help is needed. This isn't a simple problem, and it won't be solved with a simple solution. It will take hard work on multiple fronts, and we'll need all the necessary tools on the table.

There's nothing wrong with monitoring your family's reading habits. What is wrong is to issue blanket rules of taste. Just because you've decided something is inappropriate, it doesn't mean everyone else must live by your same standard. Freedom of expression is one of those cornerstones of a free society which we all too often take for granted. The price we must pay for enjoying this luxury is sticking up for free speech, even — and especially — when it's controversial.

McCain is right. This is simply unacceptable. Puerto Ricans — American citizens — are facing a desperate situation that has already spiraled into a full-blown humanitarian crisis. Arcane protectionist maritime laws are keeping valuable resources from reaching the people who desperately need it. We must act as decisively as we have done during previous emergencies. Time is of the essence.

There's never a better time than right now to address what ails us. This should be an easy issue for politicians of both parties to get behind. It has nothing to do with banning the weapons themselves. What we should be doing is finding something, anything, we can do to try to limit the body count so that the next Stephen Paddock has just that much harder of a time mowing down scores of innocents.

As far as who will come into contact with the most vulnerable to the opioid epidemic, you'd be hard pressed to find a more suited position than township government. These are the people who are tasked with helping those who need it the most in our state. They will have the most opportunities to access on the ground who needs what kind of help, and direct them toward resources sooner rather than later.

What we can say with certainty is that the health benefits will be evident. As Howard County Commissioner Paul Wyman has repeatedly pointed out, Howard County is listed in the bottom half of health rankings for Indiana's 92 counties.
